

Yellow Tail Party Roo Gets a Marsupial Makeover for Super Bowl Return Trip

Plus, Kevin Durant can't chuck a ball into the crowd without hitting a California vintner, and you'll never guess who the $1,000 Super Bowl sandwich guy is rooting for

Chef Creates $1,000 Super Bowl Pastrami Sandwich with Truffles, Gold Flakes, Champagne, Hopes Patriots Win

Beer and hot dogs—or wings and clams—won't cut it for chef and New England Patriots supporter Oscar Martinez this Super Bowl Sunday. The toque at Doma Land & Sea, a kosher restaurant in the Long Island town of Cedarhurst, "wanted to do something extravagant for the Super Bowl," he told Unfiltered, and to show off his best ingredients. Hence, the "King Doma," a $1,000 pastrami sandwich: 28-day dry-aged prime beef short ribs coated with an Indonesian Luwak coffee pastrami rub, garnished with $100-per-pound foie gras, white truffles, Champagne-infused French mustard and gold flakes, served with a glass of Champagne Louis de Sacy Brut Rosé NV.

Is a $1,000 sandwich a sandwich?

Martinez, who hopes to see a sixth Lombardi Trophy for the team that holds the record for biggest fine ever imposed by the NFL for cheating, led by a man who holds the record for biggest fine ever imposed on a coach for an entirely different incident of cheating, told Unfiltered that so far he has sold three of the sandwiches, with a fourth on order for the big day. No word on who the big-spending snackers are and where they identify on the spectrum of "Tom Brady is the greatest athlete of all time" to "Tom Brady is the greatest human to ever live."
